The Circulation of The Bulletin.

The Bulletin has the largest circulation of any paper in Eastern Connecticut, and from three to four times larger than that of any in Norwich. It is delivered to over 3,000 of the 4,058 houses in Norwich, and read by ninety-three per cent. of the people. In Windham it is delivered to over 900 houses. in Putsam and Danielson to over 1,100, and in all of these places it is considered the local daily.

Eastern Connecticut has fortynine towns, one hundred and sixtyfive post office districts and fortyone rural free delivery routes.

The Bulletin is sold in every town and on all of the R. F. D. routes in Eastern Connecticut.

SANE AND SAFE FOURTH. Norwich is going to have an oldfashioned celebration of the Fourth this year and it is already booked as sane and safe.

With the combination of national patriotic spirit and civic pride we expect to create the star performance in the state of Connecticut, if not in all New England.

When it comes to distinguished

"the Rose of New England" will have to be accorded first place and when the entertainment to be provided for our people and our visitors is considered there is no opportunity to make Norwich second.

The small boy has been semi-officially notified that he is not going to have the freedom of the streets for the purpose of creating therein a pan-demondum of noise and fire. The small boy might well plead not guilty to the charge, since the worst offenders have been big boys, many of whom have a mustache and a vote.

The ruling was necessary and The Bulletin hopes that there will be no attempt in our crowded streets to repeat the annoying performances which all the queer dances being given in its have characterized the celebration of name. the Fourth here for many years, will not be necessary and there will be so much going on of greater and tariff they appear sometimes very much like newspaper reporters trying likely to act as a check upon it.

The Fourth, with its great fires, is not old-fashioned, for in the early tays the use of explosives was meager sempared with what it is today, and the chances for accidental fire not one in ten to modern risks. The Indepentence day of great fires and innumer. ble fatalities is modern, and it has reached the point for restraint. Norwich is going to be in gala dress this time, with eminent company and prest parades and brass bands and reworks and on its good behavior. We shall be seen then at our best.

AN AMERICAN DUTY.

This nation is building a great inprocesnic canal and has no merchant parine to use it.

It is plainly the duty of the govern nent to take measures to promote he building up of great fleets of reighters to sail under the American

The effort of the Merchant Marine league for the inauguration of regular and swift steamship lines, American built, American owned and American operated, carrying mail, passengors and freight, between United States ports and the ports of South America, Philippines, Australasia and other points with which we have now no direct communication, is most commendable, for it will not redound to the oredit of the nation to have this canal used by foreign vessels under foreign flags in the American earry-

This would not look well. When we have spent several hundred million build a canal to facilitate international trade not to have the men and the ships to promote it, but to let foreign vessels under foreign flags do the business American ships should do, is, indeed, to appear ridiculous.

ABUSE OF INSANE PATIENTS.

Two attendants of the Plerce Farm azykum in Massacnusetts have been found guilty of manslaughter because of their brutality to a patient which ended in a fatal result. The Brockton Enterprise, in referring to the matter said:

"A jury has decided that a patient at a city insane asylum didn't smash his own ribs, and two men have been

is too often more reason to complain of the violence of the same than of the insane. These men must have been unnecessarily cruel or they would not have been found guilty and con-

THE HORSE DOESN'T NEED A BONNET.

Since most horses are unbonneted in summer, and the fad of covering the head did not become popular though inexpensive, the news that the horse suffers more from a bonnet than from want of one is not of so much importance. It has come to light that Baron Henri d'Anchald, a French scientist, has been making tests of the temperatures in equine headgear. experiments were made when the temperature was at 79 degres Fahrenheit in the shady open. Bareheaded horses standing in the sun were found to have a temperature of $6 degrees beneath their forelocks. When straw hats were put on the thermometer reg-istered 98. Under canvas it was 103. A horse trotting in the sun while bare had a temperature of $3 beneath the forelock. Under straw the thereter rose to 91 and beneath cloth to 100 degrees, The conclusion is that the bonnets prevent the movement of the air and allow of the storing of heat.

In other words, the bonnets which ooked so humane to sympathetic people are not so. Giving the horse's head an occasional sponging is declared to be better and of more importance than this other device.

GOLD DISAPPEARS.

It is no easier to tell where all the gold goes to than where all the needles and pins go to. Since the dis-covery of this country, 13 billions of gold have been produced, of which 2 billions have disappeared utterly, in spite of the fact that gold is more jealously guarded than any other possession, not excepting life.

A recent bulletin issued by the department of commerce and labor, says that up to the year 1850 the average yearly yield of the mixes of the world was worth about $12,000,000. The rush of '49 and the finding of gold in Australia brought production over $100. 000,000 a year. In 1893 the 150 million line was crossed. In 1896, 202 millions entered the world's markets and last year 427 million dollars' worth was dug from the earth. The distribution in st a city insane asylum didn't smash his own ribs, and two men have been held for manslaughter. The trouble with these attendants was that they didn't stop to realize that their man had friends in an influential labor union, and there is where they may lose. Ordinarily the beating and killing of an insane man would be a safe performance."

United States 1,613,000,000; Germany 1,044.000,000; France 926,000,000; Russia 917,000,000; United Kingdom 565, 000,000; Austria-Hungary 303,000,000; Italy 258,000,000; Australia 169,000,000; Egypt 140,000,000; Argentina 140,000,-600; Turkey 182,000,000; India 113,000,-600; Jepan 96,000,000; Canada 66,000,-000; and Brazil 51,000,000.

The theory that the world's supply of gold is nearly exhausted does not find acceptance so long as the world's product of gold is well maintained and new mines are constantly being found.

When it comes to violence in an insane retreat it should be kept to the point of subduing the insane culprit and it may properly be assumed that passion should not enter into the strife, but where fear predominates it is safe to say that the methods of reducing a lunatic to submission are neither calm nor gentle, or should they be expected to be. It is difficult to bring a violent crazy man to terms without a blow or some injury; but it is not right to kick, pound or abuse him when he is down, and there is too often more reason to complain of the violence of the sane than of Inquirer.

THE EULLETIN'S DAILY STORY

THE PUNISHMENT

It was afternoon when Roman stepped off the train and looked about him. The sunlight filtered through the quiet trees that surrounded the station. It was all unchanged, although he had not seen the place for 12 years.

"I am here!" There was an impatient weariness in Roman's audible sollloquy. "Are you satisfied?"

An idle station agent sat at n latticed window.
"Did you speak to me?" he asked.

"Did you speak to me?" he asked.

Roman did not hear him. He heard only that familiar voice of Sterling as it answered his question.

"Have you no wish to see my daughter?"

The man nodded,
"She lives with her mother's people, the Whittiers, Marcile's a good girl. Takes things too serious, I think—but she's like her father in that, Going to ride over?"
"No" said Roman "I'll walk"

Going to ride over?"
"No," said Roman, "Til walk."
The agent went to the end of the platform with him.
"This town always kept an eye on you," he remarked, admiringly. "When you left here no one thought you'd make such a name fon yourself. How did you ever come to think of writing books, anyway?" books, anyway?

Abruptly Roman set off slone, but by the time he reached the Whittier come a strange calm pervaded him. Standing by the gate, he looked out wer the green valley and the trees

"Marcile?" he said, "Marcile!"

Roman had been stopping at the hotel for a week. It was the happiest week he had spent in years. He had passed the days with Marche. The evenings were dreamed away on the Whittiers' plazza. What they talked about he could not tell. He only knew that what she said refreshed and en-couraged him. The deadening load which he had carried for years was lightened in her presence. Why he could not say. She was very good. He had grown to love her goodness. Sometimes he thought that it was his contact with sinlessness which had made his own sin lighter. Sterling had not snoken since the day of his arnot spoken since the day of his arrival. Perhaps he would never speak again. It seemed that a life of devotion to Marcile would make amends for what he had done.

for what he had done.

The days drifted idly until the summer was gone.

"Very soon," said Marcile one morning, as she and Roman wandered in the woods together, "very soon you will have spent your holiday and will go back to the city and your work."

"If you will come with me," said Roman, "I will go back, If you will not, I will never go back again. My happiness depends on being near you." But as he waited eagerly for her answer, he heard Sterling's voice.

"You must tell her what you are," it said distinctly.

Beseechingly, Roman gazed past the voice at Marcile. Her trustful eyes were upon him. She opened her lips to speak.

"Tell her," repeated Sterling.

"Marcile," said Roman in desperation. "I love you, but before you speak you must know my sin."

"Your sin?"

from here to make their fortunes. They had a desire to write. One was a genius, the other had only common ability, but they worked together. They starved and hoped and failed together—until one day the genius stopped writing. The ather found him lying back in his chair, his rigid fingers still gripping the pen—but there was a manuscript on the table. After a while the other read it and it was good. The writer was dead. Marcile, that was my sin. That first book of mine by which everything of mine has sold since, was not mine. It was written by your father."

He did not answer. There was nothing to say. He could not look up.

After a long time he gained courage to raise his head. He was alone. The load on his heart was intolerably heavy again and the loneliness was deadening. In desperation he called on Sterling fiercely.

"I could have made amends. Does punishment last forever?"

But even Sterling was silent.

He was alone.—Boston Post.
